

Open access journal publishers

An open-access journal is one that provides free global online access with minimal or no copyright limitations. Open-access articles are freely available for redistribution and reuse. In many cases, publishers are creating online-only journals designed to disseminate barrier-free research results rapidly; these publications are peer reviewed, fully open access and are designed to publish new scientific or academic findings.

Major hybrid journal publishers

A "hybrid journal" is published by a traditional subscription-based publisher; articles can be made immediately available to the public if the author pays an additional publication fee (also referred to as "paid access," "open choice," "sponsored article," etc.). "Hybrid open access" differs from the true open access in that hybrid publishers often have restrictions on redistribution and reuse. A fully open-access journal, on the other hand, has limited copyright restrictions which means anyone, anywhere with access to the Internet may read, download, copy, and distribute that article. See the publisher site, the Directory of Open Access and Hybrid Journals or (for a more complete list, see Sherpa/RoMEO (<http://www.sherpa.ac.uk/romeo/PaidOA.html>)) for the most current information on fees and copyright policies.
